Exploring/Teaching the Psychology of Women

Library Resources in the Psychology of Women

For valuable discussions on how to use the card catalog and finding books on women's issues, consult:

In addition:

Women's Studies Abstracts: This is a basic indexing and abstracting source for research on the study of women. It covers not only feminist and women's studies sources, but selectively covers articles of 1,000 words or more in journals in many other fields. It began publication in 1972 and is published quarterly. It is available in printed format only.

Studies on Women Abstracts: This index has been published bimonthly since 1985. It is international in scope, scanning major journals and books. It includes journal articles, books and book chapters. It, too, is available in printed format only.

Catalyst Resource on the Workforce and Women: This database, available online only, is produced by the Catalyst Information Center (250 Park Avenue, New York City). It covers many aspects of women's issues, focusing on those which relate to career and work areas. There is no printed index, but accessions lists are published and the collection is open to the public by appointment.

In addition to these three specialized sources, the following databases all provide useful information:

ERIC (Educational Resources Information Center): The online version covers the years 1966 on. It is available in printed form as Current Index to Journals in Education (1969-) which indexes articles from over 700 major education and education related journals, and Resources in Education (1966-), which indexes education related documents.

Sociological Abstracts: Available online (1963-) and in printed format (1952-). This index scans over 1200 journals and other serial publications to cover the world's literature in sociology and related areas in social and behavioral sciences.

Psychological Abstracts: Available online as PsychInfo (1967-) and in printed form (1927__). This is an international service which covers over 1300 journals and other publications in psychology and behavioral sciences.

ABI/INFORM: Available online (1971__). Almost 700 publications in business and related fields are scanned. The database contains much useful information on women, focusing on career and workforce issues. A somewhat comparable printed resource is Business Periodicals Index (1958-) which is itself available online and covers approximately 300 sources.

Legal Resources Index: Available online (1980__). The database covers over 750 key law journals and six law newspapers, plus legal monographs. It provides a legal perspective on women's issues. A useful printed index is the Index to Legal Periodicals (1908-), which is also available online.

Index of Economic Articles: Available online as Economic Literature Index (19690) and in printed form (1886__). This covers approximately 260 economic journals and 200 monographs. It is valuable for the economic perspective it provides on women's issues.

For more general, less scholarly material there is:

Magazine Index: Available online and in microfiche (1959-) which indexes more than 430 popular magazines. Comparable printed resources are Reader's Guide to Periodical Literature (1900-) which indexes about 200 general interest magazines, and Access (1975-) which indexes national general interest publications not covered in Reader's Guide.

Alternative Press Index: Available in printed format only (1969__). This index covers close to 200 leftist and radical opinion journals and newspapers from the English speaking world.

A useful and interesting resource is the Social Sciences Citation Index (1971-), available online as Social SciSearch (1972__). In addition to conventional research by title words, author, journal names, it is possible to search an author's cited references in this source. Beginning with a single useful source article, one can trace other authors who are citing that source and who presumably are researching the same or related areas.
